Introduction

In this fun present perfect vs. past simple activity, students see how well they know a partner by completing sentences about them in the present perfect and past simple and then verifying the information by asking and answering questions.

Procedure

Divide the students into pairs. Give each student a copy of the worksheet.

Tell the students that they are going to see how well they know their partner by completing sentences about them in the present perfect or past simple.

Demonstrate the activity by writing the first two sentences from the worksheet on the board. Invite students to complete the two sentences using your name with information that they think is true for you.

Example:

1. James started learning English in 1990.
2. James has had his mobile phone for six months.

Next, elicit the questions the students need to ask you to find out if their sentences are correct, i.e. 'When did you start learning English?' and 'How long have you had your mobile phone?'

Then, answer the questions to see if the students' sentences are correct or not.

Working alone, the students then complete the sentences about their partner in the present perfect or past simple using the correct form of the verbs in brackets. Students do this without conferring with their partner.

When the students have completed the sentences, ask them to pair up with another student who isn't their partner to prepare the questions they need to ask to verify the information. Go around helping the students as necessary.

When the questions have been prepared, tell the students to go back to their original partner and find out how many of their sentences are right by taking it in turns to ask and answer questions in the present perfect and past simple.

Students score themselves one point for each correct sentence. The student with the highest score wins. Afterwards, get feedback from the students to see how well they know their partner and find out who got the highest score.
