Introduction

In this topic-based making suggestions lesson, students learn how to make, accept and reject suggestions.

Procedure

Students begin by looking at pictures of eight presents and writing the names of the presents below the pictures.

Exercise A - Answer key

a watch, socks, a book, a birthday cake, a tie, tickets for a football match, headphones, a camera.

After the answers have been checked, students rank the presents from the most to the least expensive.

The students then answer questions about which present they would most and least like to receive for their birthday and which would be the best and worst present for their dad.

Afterwards, get feedback on the students' answers.

Students then complete a gap-fill dialogue where two people are suggesting presents for their dad's birthday.

Exercise C - Answer key

- | | | |
|-------------------|-------------------|-------------|
| 1. Shall we | 5. Why don't | 9. Let's |
| 2. don't think | 6. instead | 10. perfect |
| 3. How/What about | 7. How/What about | |
| 4. don't think so | 8. sounds good | |

Check the answers with the class and then have the students identify and write down the phrases used for making, accepting and rejecting suggestions from the dialogue.

| Making a suggestion | Accepting | Rejecting |
|---------------------|---|--|
| Shall we...? | Yes, that sounds good. That's perfect. | I don't think that's a good idea. I don't think so. |
| How about...? | | |
| What about...? | | |
| Why don't we...? | | |
| Let's... | | |

Next, students answer questions about the dialogue and discuss their answers in pairs.

Finally, the students create a conversation where they make, accept and reject suggestions for a friend's birthday present using a set of prompts together with the language they have learnt. Students then present their conversations to the class.

A. Below are pictures of eight presents. Write the names of the presents under the pictures.
