Introduction

This engaging worksheet activity gives students practice at asking and answering questions using various structures. This activity can also be used as an icebreaker on the first day of class.

Procedure

Put the students into groups of fifteen. Sit each group in a circle.

Give each student a copy of the worksheet.

Ask the students to write their name at the top of the first column.

Now ask the students to give their worksheet to the person sitting on their right.

Tell the students that they are going to think of a question that they would like to ask the person whose name is at the top of the worksheet.

The students write their question on the worksheet by completing one of the unfinished questions or by using the empty spaces at the bottom of the worksheet to write their own question. Students can choose any unfinished question they like.

When students have written a question, they write their name next to it in the space provided in the second column. Students then give the worksheet to the person on their right and repeat the process.

The activity continues until the students receive back their own worksheet.

If there are less than fifteen students in a group, when a student receives back their unfinished worksheet, have them pass it to the student on their right and continue. When the worksheet is completed, students hand the worksheet to the person whose name is written at the top of the first column.

The students then find the person who wrote each question and answer it.

Finally, have students give feedback to the class on what they found out about their classmates.
